Discussion of Ilene Spiewak's work over lunch

“My work as a painter involves making images from a near non-representational position moving toward abstraction. While working on 2 or 3 canvases at a time, I consider what is in front of me as well as what I invent. My body of work has a sense of excitement and energy achieved through layers of color that build on one another. I draw basic compositional elements to create forms and shapes on the canvas which may be painted out or enhanced with bold lines and washes of strong color combinations.

I am inspired by the very essence of color and form in nature. I love to paint still-life, figures, and landscapes. My most recent study involves combining acrylic paint with other media, including oil paint, oil stick, oil pastel, and caran d'ache in one composition. My quest is to explore the possibilities as well as the limitations of using these mediums together.” I am “drawn to Matisse, Diebenkorn, Viennese painters in the 1900's, German Expressionists, and Canadian landscape painters such as Emily Carr.” RSVP: kcarmean@gmail.com
